

Social Security is a major source of income for most people age 65 and over.

Do you know seven possible sources of retirement income?

- 1) Social Security (the base)
- 2) An employer pension (less common today)
- 3) Income from an IRA or 401(k)
- 4) Roth IRAs
- 5) Nonqualified assets (i.e., nonqualified annuities, mutual funds, life insurance)
- 6) Continued employment
- 7) If necessary, welfare or charity

The Social Security program was originally established to provide the base of financial protection for working people and their families when earnings are lost due to retirement.

Social Security can be more than just retirement income. The system provides many different benefits to workers and their families. Social Security provides income to disabled workers and families, and in some cases, income to surviving spouses and children of workers who have died.

For those who qualify for benefits, Social Security is a retirement income source with choices and therefore some degree of control. Managing your Social Security benefit should be part of your entire retirement income process. Social Security is often the foundation or starting point of the retirement income analysis.

But not everyone understands how Social Security benefits work – or how to help maximize the value of these benefits. And when you add a spouse to the picture, your planning can become quite complex. This brochure will give you a good overview of the program, qualifications, and benefits.

Qualifying for Social Security retirement benefits

To qualify for retirement benefits, you must be fully insured, which means you've earned the required number of Social Security credits. For most workers, that means you need 40 credits – or about 10 years of work (at four quarters each year) – to qualify for retirement benefits. Through the years, the way you earn credits has changed. In 2014, one credit is recorded for every $1,200 you earn during the year.

Once you have those 40 credits and qualify for Social Security, the Social Security Administration will calculate your benefits by looking at all the years you have worked and contributed to the Social Security system.

Your retirement benefit is based on your primary insurance amount.

To figure your primary insurance amount (PIA), you need to know your average indexed monthly earnings (AIME), which is based on your lifetime earnings history.

For everyone born after 1929, your AIME is calculated by using your highest 35 years of earnings, which are “indexed” to account for average wage changes since the year your earnings were received. If you have not worked for 35 years, some of your highest earnings years could be zero.

Social Security then averages your 35 highest years of indexed earnings. It takes that average and applies one more formula to come up with your primary insurance amount. This is the monthly amount you would receive at full retirement age (FRA). If you retire at full retirement age, you'll get your full PIA amount.

Your full retirement age depends on the year of your birth. For those born in 1937 or earlier, the FRA is age 65. For people born between 1943 and 1954, the FRA is currently age 66. For those born in 1960 or after, the FRA increases by two months per year until it reaches age 67.

¹ If you were born on January 1 of any year, you should refer to the previous year. (If you were born on the first of the month, the Social Security Administration will figure your benefit (and your full retirement age) as if your birthday was in the previous month.) Social Security Administration, Retirement Planner: Full Retirement Age, 2014.

PRIMARY INSURANCE AMOUNT (PIA) is the Social Security benefit you will receive if you retire at your full retirement age.

AVERAGE INDEXED MONTHLY EARNINGS (AIME) is based on your lifetime earnings history indexed for inflation, and is calculated by using your highest 35 years of indexed earnings.

FULL RETIREMENT AGE (FRA) is the age at which a person may first become entitled to full retirement benefits. In 2014, those reaching FRA will be age 66. For those born after 1954, FRA will be between 66 and 67.

What is the maximum monthly Social Security benefit?

For a worker retiring in 2014 at the full retirement age of 66, the highest monthly amount is $2,642. In December of 2013, average monthly Social Security benefits for a retired worker was about $1,294.

Can you start your Social Security benefits earlier, say at age 62 or so?

You could start to get Social Security retirement benefits as early as age 62 – but if you start before your full retirement age (age 66 for those reaching FRA in 2014), your benefits will be reduced. Today it is reduced by 25% if you retire at age 62. For those born in 1960 or later, the reduction is 30% if benefits are started early at age 62.

Increasing benefits by delaying retirement

a hypothetical example:

Bill's primary insurance amount is $2,000 a month at age 66 (his full retirement age).

If Bill retired early at age 62, he would get $1,500 a month. If instead, he delayed his retirement to age 70, he would get 32% more – or $2,640 a month.

As you can see, it pays to delay depending on your income needs and life expectancy.

However, you can increase your benefits by delaying the start until you are past your full retirement age.

You can earn delayed retirement credits (DRC) for every month you defer, up to age 70. You'll get an increased benefit of 8% more for each year that benefits are delayed, up to four years (a 32% maximum increase). A cost-of-living adjustment (COLA) will also be applied to your benefit amount.

¹ If you were born on January 1 of any year, you should refer to the previous year. (If you were born on the first of the month, the Social Security Administration will figure your benefit (and your full retirement age) as if your birthday was in the previous month.) Social Security Administration, Retirement Planner: Full Retirement Age, 2014.

Can you continue to work while receiving Social Security benefits?

If you work and take benefits before full retirement age, you could have some Social Security benefits reduced by continuing to work if you make too much under the so-called “earnings cap.”

In 2014, the maximum amount you could earn by working is $15,480. (Your spouse’s earnings, if any, are not included in the earnings test.) So if you make more than that amount while under full retirement age, your benefit would be reduced up to $1 in Social Security benefits for every $2 you make over that $15,480.

However, during the year you reach FRA, you can earn a higher amount up until the first of the month you turn FRA and not have your Social Security benefits reduced. In 2014, that maximum amount is $41,400. If you earn more than that, your benefit would be reduced $1 in Social Security benefits for every $3 you earn over that limit.

Beginning the first day of the month when you attain full retirement age, you can now work and make any amount and not get a reduction in Social Security benefits.

Please note that any reduction in your Social Security income that occurs before full retirement age (due to your continuing to work) will result in positive adjustment to your monthly benefit when you reach your full retirement age.

Can you receive the Social Security benefit if you’re a nonworking individual?

If you have never worked, or have not worked enough to be eligible for your own Social Security retirement benefits, you may not get any Social Security benefit unless you are, or have been, married. If so, and you meet the special rules for married, survivor, or divorced, you may be eligible for spousal or survivor benefits, based on your spouse’s or ex-spouse’s earnings history.

When should you start benefits?

You should carefully consider when to start benefits, since the decision will impact how much you collect from Social Security during your lifetime. Depending on your health and life expectancy (which is often impacted by your lifestyle and genetics), you might opt to delay benefits. Obviously, if you are in poor health, starting at an earlier age may make sense. Talk to your Social Security Administration for more information.

DELAYED RETIREMENT CREDITS (DRC)

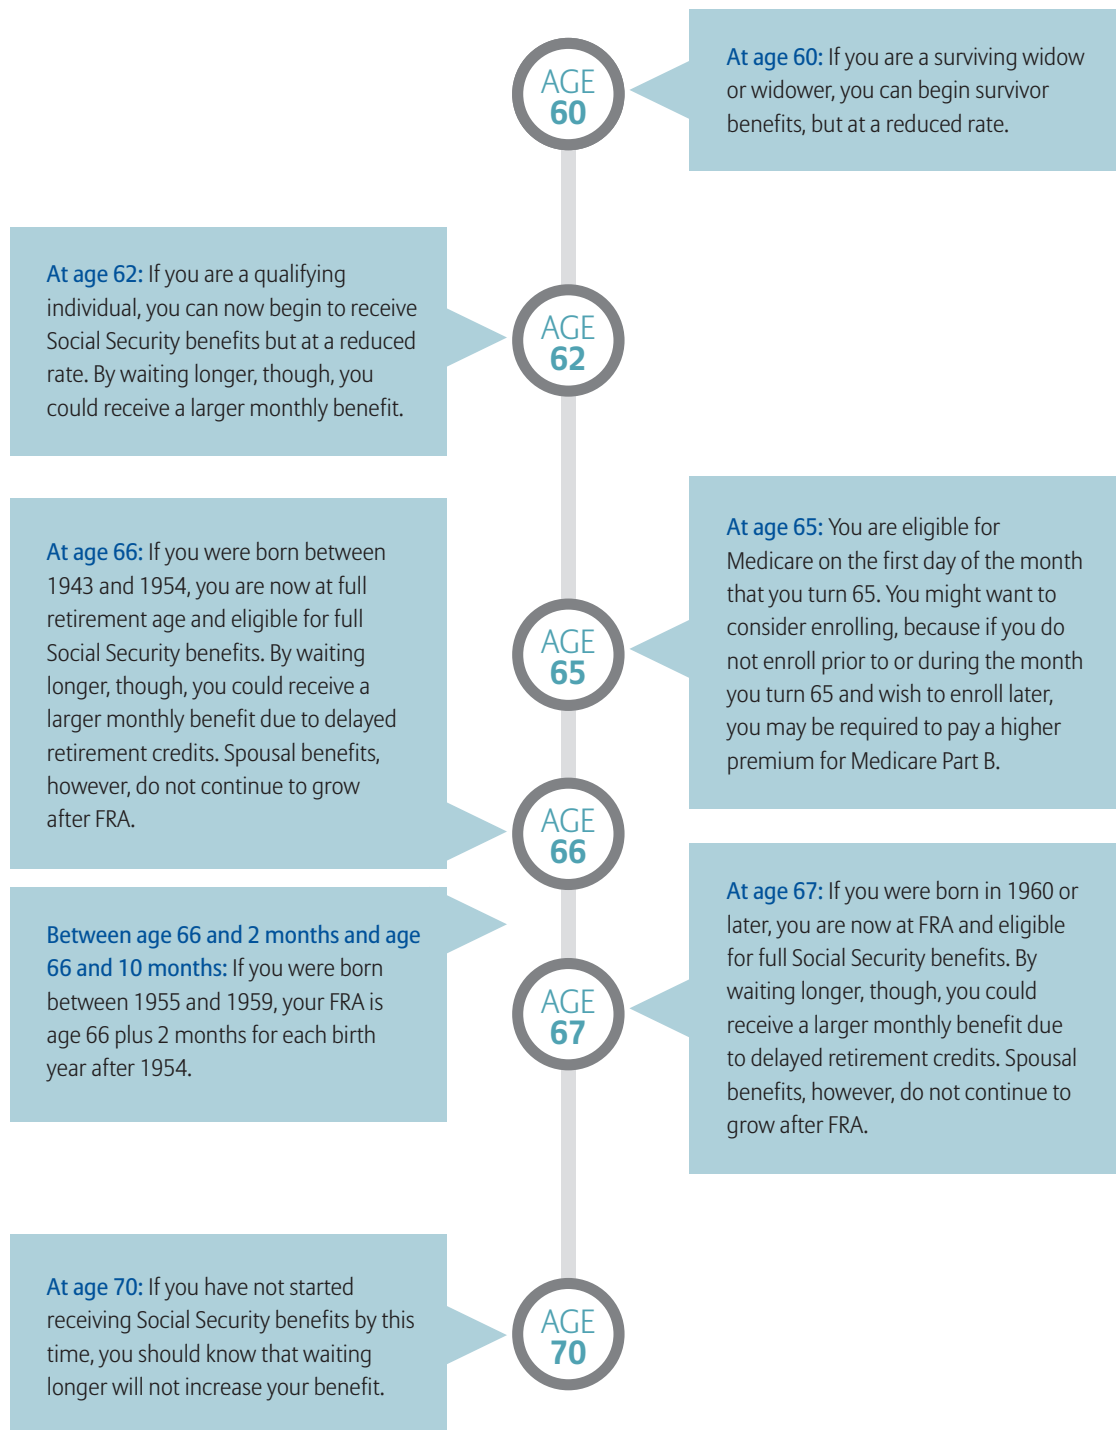

can increase your Social Security benefits by 7%-8% annually, if you defer your retirement past your full retirement age (FRA). You can earn delayed retirement credits for every month you defer your retirement up to age 70.

COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENT (COLA)

is a periodic increase in the amount of Social Security benefits, to help offset some of the effect of inflation.

A Social Security decision timeline

Because the Social Security process involves several important decisions and a careful consideration of alternatives, we urge you to work with your financial professional to be sure you make the choices that are right for you.

Taxation issues

To support your retirement benefits, there are two separate payroll taxes that are withheld from your earnings. In most cases, these two taxes are added together and treated as one amount called FICA (Federal Insurance Contributions Act):

- Social Security: This tax of 6.2% pays for the benefits entitled to Social Security beneficiaries. It is made up of 5.3% for old-age and survivors insurance and 0.9% for disability insurance.
- Medicare (hospital insurance): This tax of 1.45% pays for hospital benefits for Medicare beneficiaries. Since 2013, an additional 0.9% tax applies to high-income employees.

You and your employer each pay taxes to support Social Security and Medicare. If you're self-employed, you pay both the employee and employer shares.

What earnings are taxed?

All salaries, wages, bonuses, and commissions that you receive for working are taxed and credited to your earnings record.

The Social Security tax is withheld until the maximum taxable earning ($117,000 in 2014) for the year is reached. Medicare tax is withheld from every paycheck, and high-income employees could pay an additional 0.9% tax, once earning more than $200,000 individual/$250,000 joint.

Are your Social Security benefits taxed when received?

Social Security retirement benefits may be taxable depending on your combined income. Your combined income is the sum of your adjusted gross income, plus nontaxable interest, plus one-half of Social Security benefits.

Individuals who have higher combined incomes could be taxed on up to 85% of their Social Security income. For middle-income earners, 50% of their Social Security income could be taxable. For lower-income people, none of the Social Security income is taxable.

Keep in mind that these percentages are the portion of the Social Security that would then be subject to the tax rates (i.e., for higher income earners, 85% itself is not the tax rate).

How benefits are taxed

Single or head of household

50% taxable with $25,000 combined income

85% taxable with $34,000 combined income

Married, filing jointly

50% taxable with $32,000 combined income

85% taxable with $44,000 combined income

Social Security Administration, Benefits Planner: Income Taxes and Your Social Security Benefits, 2014.

Note: These percentages are the amount of Social Security benefit included in income, not the tax rate on the Social Security benefit.

Spousal benefits

There are some strategies that can help retirees and their spouses make the most of their Social Security benefits. Throughout this brochure, our use of the term “spouse” will be based on federal law, which generally considers individuals to be married if they were legally married under the law of the state where the marriage took place

Two qualifying spouses

For qualifying spouses (both worked outside the home and thus, both qualify for Social Security benefits), there are two possibilities. The spouse with the lower primary insurance amount can either:

- Take the benefits generated by his/her own earnings history;
- OR
- Take half of the spouse’s retirement benefit (if greater).

Keep in mind that to get a spousal benefit, the other spouse must have started collecting benefits or have reached full retirement age. Also, benefits for a spouse or worker are reduced if taken prior to FRA. In addition, only one spouse can collect a spousal benefit at a time.

SPOUSAL BENEFIT is the benefit you can collect based on your spouse’s primary insurance amount at full retirement age. The benefit can be up to 50% of your spouse’s PIA and cannot go into effect until your spouse files for their own benefit.

One qualifying spouse and one nonqualifying spouse

If only one spouse worked outside the home, then the other spouse is considered a nonqualifying spouse (i.e., did not pay Social Security or Medicare taxes).

A nonqualifying spouse can collect on the record of the spouse who is qualified to receive benefits. However, the nonqualifying spouse must have been married at least one year to the qualifying spouse, or be the parent of their child.

If a nonqualifying spouse is at FRA or later, the nonqualifying spouse receives an amount equal to 50% of the primary insurance amount of the qualifying spouse (not necessarily their benefit amount). If the nonqualifying spouse is at least age 62 but under FRA, that person may receive permanently reduced benefits.

To start a spousal benefit, the qualifying spouse must have started collecting benefits or have reached FRA.

File and suspend strategy

A “file and suspend” strategy is available to a wage earner at full retirement age. The wage earner would file for his or her own Social Security benefit, and then immediately suspend the benefit. This filing by the primary wage earner allows the other spouse, with a lower benefit or no benefit on their own work record, to start to collect a spousal benefit. The other spouse must be age 62 or older to start a spousal benefit.

The suspending of benefits also allows the primary wage earner to collect delayed retirement credits (DRCs) at an additional 8% per year on their own benefit until the benefit is unsuspended at age 70, or earlier if the wage earner chooses. There is no additional advantage for delaying Social Security benefits for either spouse beyond age 70.

File-restricted strategy

To use a file-restricted strategy, both spouses must qualify for Social Security retirement benefits. If one spouse has already begun receiving benefits or has filed and suspended, then the other wage earner, upon reaching full retirement age, can file a restricted application – filing only for a spousal benefit.

This allows one wage earner to start collecting a spousal benefit, while delayed retirement credits are earned on their own benefits. Please note that the file-restricted strategy requires the other spouse to have started their own benefit, or to be FRA or older and have filed and suspended.

File and suspend strategy a hypothetical example:

John and Mary are a married couple. John is 66 in the year of his full retirement age; Mary is age 63. Mary’s primary insurance amount (PIA) is $800/month, while John’s PIA is $2,000/month.

Mary retired a year ago at age 62 to begin her own reduced benefit of $600/month. John wants to keep working until age 70.

John files and suspends at full retirement age. Mary then files at age 63 to get a higher spousal benefit based on half of John’s PIA.

Here’s how: At age 63 Mary takes half of John’s PIA, or $1,000. This is a $200 increase from her own PIA of $800. But because she is taking this spousal benefit before her full retirement age, her increase is reduced by $50, giving her a $950 spousal benefit.

Meanwhile, John’s own benefit grows – based on his delayed retirement credits – until he files for his own benefits at age 70.

This strategy accomplishes these goals:

- Mary obtains a higher benefit.
- Mary receives a spousal benefit even while John chooses to continue working.
- John obtains delayed retirement credits on his own benefit.
- John can continue working until age 70 if he desires and this strategy will not be affected.

File-restricted strategy a hypothetical example:

Roger is waiting until age 70 to start his own benefits. Kim, who is 63, has already started receiving her reduced benefits based upon her primary insurance amount (PIA).

Roger’s primary insurance amount is $ 2,000/month; Kim’s PIA is $800/month.

Roger files restricted at full retirement age (age 66) to start his spousal benefits. Based upon 50% of his wife’s PIA, Roger would start receiving $400/month, plus any cost-of-living adjustments (COLAs).

At age 70, Roger can switch to his own retirement benefit, now increased 32% thanks to his delayed retirement credits – that’s $2,640/month (plus any COLAs).

This strategy accomplishes these goals:

- Roger and Kim make the most of a spousal benefit.
- Either wage earner has the ability to collect a spousal benefit.
- Roger can earn delayed retirement credits on his own benefit.
- Roger can continue working until age 70 if he desires and this strategy will not be affected.

The combination strategy

You may have noticed that the file and suspend strategy and the file-restricted strategy have some elements – and benefits – in common.

But the two strategies can also be combined, if both spouses:

- Worked outside the home
- Qualify for their own Social Security benefit
- Are at FRA or older
- Haven't started receiving Social Security benefits yet

To use the combination strategy, the spouse with the higher benefit would file and suspend, and the spouse with the lower benefit files restricted. This allows the one spouse with the lower benefit to get half the benefit from the other spouse until age 70. Then, when each turns age 70, they each begin their own full benefit which has grown by the 8% DRCs per year between FRA and age 70.

Survivor benefits

If a spouse dies, Social Security provides benefits to the widow or widower. For example, if you were married for at least nine months before your spouse's death, you would be eligible for survivor benefits.

The earliest you can start receiving benefits as a widow or widower is age 60; or age 50 if you're disabled before or within seven years of the death; or any age if you have eligible children. However, if you start survivor benefits before your full retirement age, your survivor benefits will be reduced by a fraction of a percentage for each month before your FRA.

Survivor benefits are based on the primary insurance amount of the deceased spouse on the date of death, including delayed retirement credits. If you receive survivor benefits and you qualify for retirement benefits that are more than your survivor benefits, you can switch from your survivor benefits to your own benefits as early as age 62.

The surviving spouse can collect either his/her own individual benefits or survivor benefits – but not both at the same time. When the surviving spouse is eligible for both benefits, he or she can choose to take one type of benefits first, then switch to other benefits later.

Note: If you remarry before age 60, you are not eligible for survivor benefits unless and until that marriage ends. If you remarry after age 60, you are still entitled to survivor benefits based on the work record of your deceased former spouse.

The combination strategy a hypothetical example:

Ron is 66 and has a primary insurance amount of $2,000/month. Betty is also 66, and her PIA is $1,800/month.

To obtain the maximum long-term payout of Social Security benefits, Ron will file and suspend, and Betty will file restricted.

Ron's filing allows Betty to start collecting a spousal benefit of $1,000/month, and the suspending option allows Ron to collect delayed retirement credits on his own benefit.

Because Betty has filed restricted, her own benefit is also collecting DRCs.

At age 70, Ron can unsuspend his own retirement benefit, which the DRCs have now increased by 32%, to $2,640/month (plus COLAs). When she turns age 70, Betty can also switch to her own retirement benefit which her DRCs have also increased by 32%, to $2,376/month.

This strategy accomplishes these goals:

- Betty obtains the maximum spousal benefit at FRA.
- Either wage earner has the ability to collect a spousal benefit.
- Ron and Betty can both obtain DRCs on their own benefit.
- Ron and Betty can both continue working until age 70 if desired and it will not affect this strategy.

Survivor benefits for married couples a hypothetical example:

Ron passes away at age 66. Ron's primary insurance amount is $2,000/month and his wife Betty's PIA is $1,800/month.

At Ron's death, Betty can collect a spousal benefit of 100% of Ron's PIA of $2,000, unreduced because she is age 66 (FRA).

At age 70, Betty would then switch to her own benefit that had increased to $2,376/month with delayed retirement credits.

Retirement benefits for a divorced spouse

If you're divorced, it's possible that you could receive a Social Security retirement benefit (and even survivor benefits) based on your former spouse's work record, as long as certain rules are met:

- You must have been married for at least 10 years before you divorced.
- You must be age 62 or older. Your benefit may be reduced if taken before your full retirement age.
- You must be currently unmarried. If you did remarry but subsequently were widowed, or are again divorced, you are still eligible to collect on the former spouse's record.
- The benefit you're entitled to receive based on your own work must be less than the benefit based on the divorce. The benefit based on the former spouse's record is 50% of the former spouse's PIA, reduced if you start prior to your own FRA.
- The amount of benefit has no effect on the other ex-spouse and his/her current spouse.
- If you are divorced at least two years, and if you and your ex-spouse are at least age 62, you can get benefits even if the other ex-spouse is not yet retired. Your former spouse must be old enough (age 62) to be eligible to collect his/her benefit, even if he/she hasn't started yet. However, if your former spouse hasn't applied yet, you can only apply for a divorced spouse's benefit if you have been divorced for at least two years.

Survivor benefits for a divorced spouse

If your former spouse dies, you will be eligible for survivor benefits, provided that you were married for at least 10 years. You cannot collect until you are age 60 (age 50 if you're disabled). The amount of survivor benefits for a divorced individual meeting the criteria is 100% of the deceased former spouse's PIA, reduced if the surviving divorced spouse is under FRA.

If you remarry before age 60, you are not eligible for survivor benefits unless and until that marriage ends. If you remarry after age 60, you are still entitled to the survivor benefits based on the work record of your deceased former spouse.

The benefits you receive as a surviving divorced spouse do not figure into the family maximum, so if your former spouse remarried, it will not reduce benefits paid to his or her widow(er).

Of course, if your retirement benefits based on your own work record are higher than your survivor benefits based on your former spouse's work record, you would want to receive your own retirement benefits, not the survivor benefits. However, a surviving divorced spouse has the option to start receiving survivor benefits and later switch to his/her own benefits (or vice versa).

Retirement benefits for a divorced spouse a hypothetical example:

Kelly is age 62 in 2014, and is not insured for her own Social Security benefit. Kelly's ex-husband, Dan, is age 64 and has a primary insurance amount of $2,000.

Assuming Kelly meets all the criteria to collect a divorced spouse's benefit, Kelly's benefit would be $700 per month – reflecting the spousal reduction for early retirement.

Survivor benefits for a divorced spouse a hypothetical example:

Cheryl's ex-husband, Jeff, recently died. Jeff was age 64 when he died and had already begun his retirement benefit. As Cheryl has not remarried and has turned 60 in 2014, she can file for survivor benefits.

The primary insurance amount of her deceased former spouse was $2,500. Because Cheryl is under her full retirement age of 66, her benefit reduction would be 25%, and she would receive $1,875 per month.

Family and disability benefits

Dependent benefits

Every natural child, adopted child, stepchild, or dependent grandchild (if the parents are deceased or disabled) of an individual eligible for retirement benefits is entitled to a child's benefit if the child is unmarried and any one of the following applies:

- Under the age of 18
- Under the age of 19 but in high school
- Any age if the child was disabled prior to age 22

Benefits for children stop when the child reaches age 18 unless the child is a high school student (benefits continue until graduation or two months after reaching age 19, whichever comes first) or disabled (if the disability began before age 22).

Each eligible child could receive up to 50% of one parent's PIA (if both parents are qualified for Social Security, then the higher of the two PIAs, but not both) for retirement benefits, and up to 75% as a survivor's benefit.

A special benefit also applies to a spouse of any age who is caring for a child under age 16, or caring for a child of any age if that child was disabled before age 22. If that caretaking situation exists and the other spouse is receiving Social Security retirement benefits (or has filed and suspended benefits), the caretaker spouse is entitled to 50% of the other spouse's PIA with no reduction because of the caretaker spouse's age.

All dependent benefits are subject to a family maximum between 150%-180% of PIA. Keep in mind that the earnings limit applies to any dependent receiving benefits. The dependent's benefit may be reduced if the dependent is under FRA, works, and earns more than the annual limit (currently $15,480/year for 2014). If the dependent earns more than the limit, only that person's benefit is reduced.

Disability benefits

Social Security also provides disability benefits, though the qualification requirements to receive them are strict. To qualify for disability benefits, the individual must meet the following:

- Be so severely physically or mentally impaired that the person is unable to perform any substantial gainful work
- Impairment is expected to last at least 12 months or result in death, and is based on medical evidence
- Must have a minimum number of Social Security credits
- Must have earned some of these credits in recent years

If the individual meets the disability Social Security guidelines more than six months prior to reaching FRA, the individual can receive a monthly disability benefit equal to the individual's PIA.

If the individual becomes disabled after starting reduced retirement benefits, the disability benefit is reduced to take into account the number of months receiving retirement benefits. The individual receiving Social Security disability benefits is automatically converted to a Social Security retirement benefit of the same amount at FRA.

Special pension rules

These are two situations involving government pensions where things get much more complicated and the end result could be a reduction in the amount of Social Security benefit you or your spouse will receive. These reductions are the government pension offset (GPO) and windfall elimination provision (WEP).

Government pension offset a hypothetical example:

Anna retires at full retirement age (66), with a teachers' pension of $900/month. She was not covered by Social Security throughout her last 60 months of employment.

Her husband, Phil, is also at full retirement age but is not a government employee. Phil's Social Security primary insurance amount is $1,000.

Under Social Security rules, Anna would be eligible for a spousal benefit of 50% of Phil's benefit, or \$500. However, due to the government pension offset, Anna would get the Social Security spousal benefit only to the extent it exceeds $\frac{2}{3}$ of her \$900 pension, which is \$600.

In this case, since $600 is greater than the $500 spousal benefit, Anna would not receive any Social Security spousal benefit.

Government pension offset for surviving spouse a hypothetical example:

If Phil died, then Anna would be entitled to Phil's Social Security primary insurance amount of \$1,000. But again, due to the GPO, this amount would be reduced by $\frac{2}{3}$ of her \$900 pension (\$600).

$$1,000 - $600 = $400$ to add to her $900 pension, for a total $1,300 in benefits.

Government pension offset (GPO)

If you worked for a federal, state, or local government and were not covered by Social Security throughout your last 60 months of employment, your potential Social Security benefit as a spouse, widow, or widower may be reduced.

The spouse, widow, or widower can receive only the amount of the Social Security benefit that exceeds two-thirds of their government pension. (This offset does not affect Medicare eligibility.)

The government pension offset was enacted to treat retired government employees similarly to other retirees who worked in Social Security-covered employment. If a government employee's work had been subject to Social Security taxes, any Social Security benefit payable as a spouse, widow, or widower would have been reduced by the person's own Social Security retirement benefit.

Without the GPO, a person would get their full government pension based on noncovered Social Security employment and an unreduced Social Security benefit.

Please note that some government pensions may allow the worker the right to take all benefits in one lump sum instead of taking monthly benefits over the worker's lifetime. Even if you choose a lump-sum payout of the government pension, the Social Security Administration will calculate a GPO reduction by applying a formula to the lump-sum amount to convert it to a monthly amount and this will reduce your Social Security benefit by $\frac{2}{3}$ of that converted monthly amount.

Windfall elimination provision (WEP)

Your Social Security retirement or disability benefits may be reduced if you received a pension from any employer that did not withhold Social Security taxes (such as a government agency or an employer in another country); and if you worked in another job(s) long enough to qualify for a Social Security retirement or disability benefit.

Under the windfall elimination provision, if you are eligible to receive such a noncovered pension, a modified formula will be used to calculate your Social Security benefit – and may result in a reduced Social Security benefit.

The reduction of your Social Security benefits is generally less if you have 21 or more years of “substantial” earnings subject to Social Security withholding. If you have 30 or more years of substantial earnings subject to Social Security withholding, there is no reduction.

For more information on government pension offsets or windfall elimination provisions, talk to your local Social Security administrator.

As of May of 2012, the Social Security Administration stopped mailing annual printed statements that arrived three months before your birthday. You can obtain your statement online by going to www.ssa.gov/mystatement or by visiting your local Social Security office.

Mailed copies are still sent to people age 60 or over who are not receiving Social Security benefits and to people in the year they turn age 25.

With all these benefits to pay out and baby boomers retiring, will Social Security last?

By 2033, the Social Security Trust Fund is expected to be depleted. At that time, revenue in the system will be adequate to pay about 77% of program costs, declining to 72% by 2087.

Congress will have to make changes: a reduction of future benefits, an increase in taxes, or combination of both. Congress did make some changes to Social Security back in the 1980s and eventually may need to make more changes to keep the system going as we know it today.

Basics of Medicare, Medicaid, and long term care

Medicare is our country's health insurance program for people age 65 or older. The program helps with the cost of health care, but it does not cover all medical expenses or the cost of most long term care. Medicare is financed by a portion of the payroll taxes paid by workers and their employers. It also is financed in part by monthly premiums deducted from Social Security checks, or paid by the individual (if not yet receiving Social Security).¹

To qualify for Medicare, generally the rules are similar to Social Security rules. But you may become eligible for Medicare the first day of the month you turn age 65. If you are receiving Social Security benefits in the month you attain age 65, you are automatically enrolled in Medicare. If you are not yet receiving Social Security retirement benefits, you should enroll in Medicare three months prior to your 65th birthday.

Medicare consists of four parts:

Medicare Part A is the inpatient hospitalization coverage, which is basically free but has some co-pays and deductibles.

Medicare Part B is your medical expense coverage that covers medically necessary services and preventative services such as doctor visits, checkups, tests, home health care, medical equipment, etc. Part B is not free – it is means-tested and involves a monthly premium.

Medicare Advantage Part C plans are available in many areas. People with Medicare Parts A and B can choose to receive all of their health care services through one of these provider organizations under Part C. Usually includes Part D and may include extra benefits at an additional cost.

Prescription drug coverage Part D helps pay for medications doctors prescribe for treatment.

About Medicare Parts A and B

What is NOT covered by Part A and Part B?

It is important to know that Medicare doesn't cover everything. If you need certain services that aren't covered under Medicare Part A or Part B, you'll have to pay for them yourself unless:

- You have other insurance (or Medicaid) to cover the costs.
- You're in a Medicare health plan that covers these services.

Even if Medicare covers a service or item, you generally have to pay deductibles, coinsurance, and copayments. Some of the items and services that Medicare doesn't cover include:

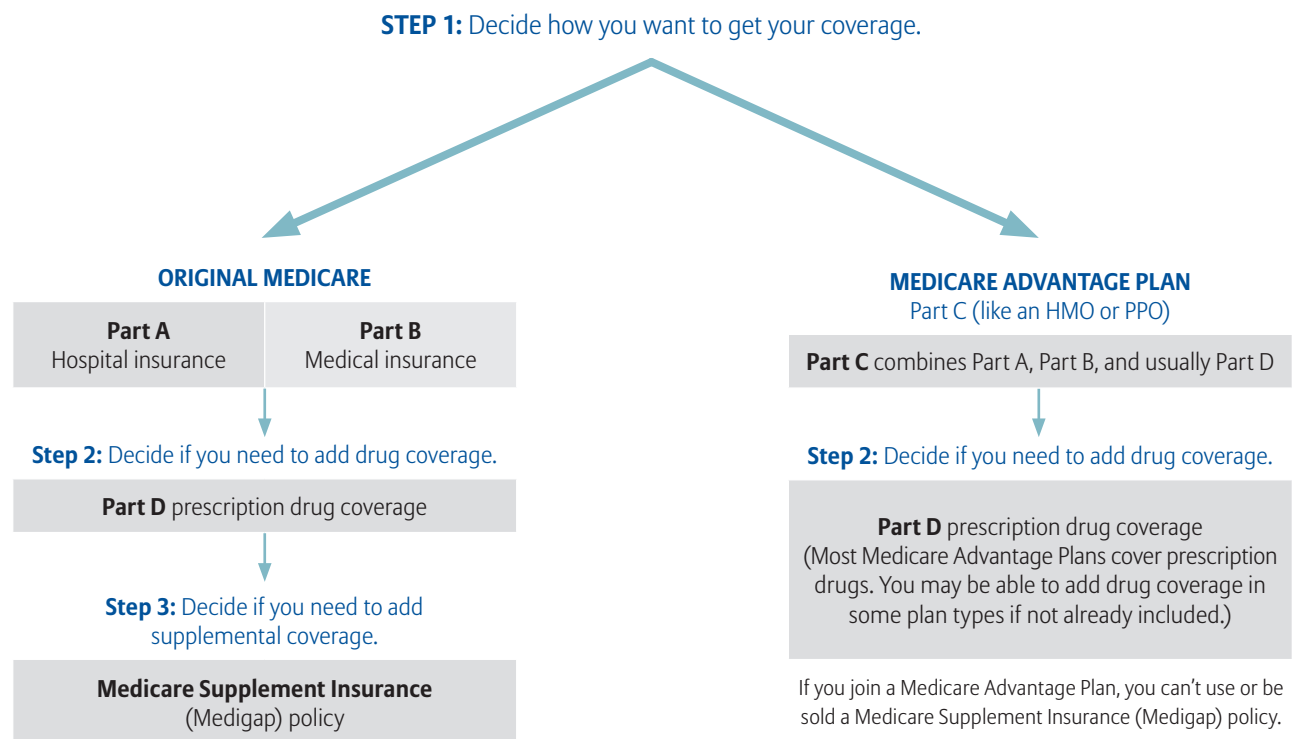

- Long term care (also called custodial care)
- Routine dental or eye care
- Dentures
- Cosmetic surgery
- Acupuncture
- Hearing aids and fittings

How much does Medicare Part B cost?

Part B is means-tested and involves a monthly premium of at least $104.90 per individual, which is the minimum for 2014. Every year, Medicare reviews your tax returns from two years prior to determine the amount of your Medicare premium. This premium is an expense item you should factor into your retirement income analysis.

What are your Medicare coverage choices?

There are two main ways to get your Medicare coverage – Original Medicare or a Medicare Advantage Plan. Use the steps below to help you decide which way to get your coverage. Please note that, while your choice is important, it doesn't have to be permanent – you'll have at least one chance each year to make changes to your Medicare coverage.

This example is provided for illustrative purposes only.

Are you automatically enrolled In Medicare Parts A and B?

If you're already getting benefits from Social Security or the Railroad Retirement Board (RRB), you'll automatically get Part A and Part B starting the first day of the month you turn 65. (If your birthday is on the first day of the month, Part A and Part B will start the first day of the prior month.)

If you're close to 65, but not getting Social Security or Railroad Retirement Board (RRB) benefits and you want Part A and Part B, you'll need to sign up.

If you're not automatically enrolled, when do you sign up?

If you want Part A and/or Part B, you can sign up during these times:

The initial enrollment period

You can sign up for Part A and/or Part B during the 7-month period that begins three months before the month you turn 65, includes the month you turn 65, and ends three months after the month you turn 65.

In most cases, if you sign up for Part A and/or Part B during the first three months of your initial enrollment period, your coverage will start the first day of your birthday month. However, if your birthday is on the first day of the month, your coverage will start the first day of the prior month.

If you enroll in Part A and/or Part B the month you turn 65 or during the last three months of your initial enrollment period, the start date for your Medicare coverage will be delayed.

The general enrollment period

If you didn't sign up for Part A and/or Part B (for which you must pay premiums) when you were first eligible, you can sign up between January 1 and March 31 each year. Your coverage will begin July 1 of that year. You may have to pay a higher Part A and/or Part B premium for late enrollment.

The special enrollment period

If you don't sign up for Part A and/or Part B when you are first eligible because you're covered under a group health plan based on current employment (your own, a spouse's, or a family member's if you're disabled), you can still sign up for Part A and/or Part B:

- Anytime you're still covered by the group health plan
- During the 8-month period that begins the month after the employment ends or the coverage ends, whichever happens first

About Medicare Advantage Plans (Part C)

A Medicare Advantage Plan (such as an HMO or PPO) is another way to get your Medicare coverage. Under this plan, you get your Medicare Part A (hospital insurance) and Medicare Part B (medical insurance) coverage from the Medicare Advantage Plan, not Original Medicare. Medicare Advantage Plans, sometimes called "Part C" or "MA Plans," are offered by private companies that are approved by Medicare.

Medicare Advantage Plans cover all Medicare services

In all types of Medicare Advantage Plans, you're covered for all of the services that Original Medicare covers (including emergency and urgent care), except for hospice care and some care in qualifying clinical research studies. However, hospice care and some costs for clinical research studies are covered by Original Medicare, even if you're in a Medicare Advantage Plan.

Medicare Advantage Plans may offer extra coverage, like vision, hearing, dental, and health and wellness programs. Most include Medicare prescription drug coverage (Part D). In addition to your Part D premium, you may pay a monthly premium for the Medicare Advantage Plan.

Medicare Advantage Plans must follow Medicare's rules

Medicare pays a fixed amount for your care each month to the companies offering Medicare Advantage Plans. These companies must follow rules set by Medicare. However, each Medicare Advantage Plan can charge different out-of-pocket costs and have different rules for how you get services (like whether you need a referral to see a specialist; or if you have to go to doctors, facilities, or suppliers that belong to the plan for non-emergency or non-urgent care). These rules can change each year. The plan must notify you about any changes before the start of the next enrollment year.

About Medicare prescription drug coverage (Part D)

Medicare offers prescription drug coverage to everyone with Medicare. Even if you don't take many prescriptions now, you could consider joining a Medicare drug plan. If you decide not to join a Medicare drug plan when you're first eligible, you may have to pay a penalty to enroll later.

There are two ways to get Medicare prescription drug coverage.

In both cases, you must join a plan run by an insurance company or other private company approved by Medicare; and you must live in that company's service area. Each plan can vary in cost and specific drugs covered.

- Medicare prescription drug plans: These plans (sometimes called PDPs) add drug coverage to Original Medicare, some Medicare cost plans, some Medicare private fee-for-service (PFFS) plans, and Medicare medical savings account (MSA) plans.
- Medicare Advantage Plans (like an HMO or PPO) or other Medicare health plans that offer Medicare prescription drug coverage: You get all of your Part A, Part B, and prescription drug coverage (Part D), through these plans. Medicare Advantage Plans with prescription drug coverage are sometimes called MA-PDs. You must have Part A and Part B to join a Medicare Advantage Plan.

If you have employer or union coverage, talk to your benefits administrator before you make any changes, or before you sign up for any other coverage.

What if you're already covered by your Medicare Advantage Plan?

If your Medicare Advantage Plan already includes prescription drug coverage, and you join a Medicare prescription drug plan, you'll be disenrolled from your Medicare Advantage Plan and returned to Original Medicare.

Medicare Supplement Insurance (Medigap) policies

Original Medicare pays for many – but not all – health care services and supplies. Medicare Supplement Insurance policies – also called Medigap policies – are sold by private companies and can help pay some of the health care costs that Original Medicare doesn't cover, including copayments, coinsurance, and deductibles. You will have to pay the premiums for a Medigap policy.

About Medicaid

Medicaid is a joint federal and state program that helps pay medical costs if you have limited income and resources and meet other requirements. Some people qualify for both Medicare and Medicaid and are called “dual eligibles.”

What does Medicaid cover?

- If you have Medicare and full Medicaid coverage, most of your health care costs are covered. You can get your Medicare coverage through Original Medicare or a Medicare Advantage Plan.
- If you have Medicare and full Medicaid coverage, Medicare covers your Part D prescription drugs. Medicaid may cover some drugs and other care that Medicare doesn't cover.
- If you have Medicaid, you may also get coverage for services that Medicare may not or may partially cover, like nursing home care, personal care, and home- and community-based services.

How do you qualify?

Medicaid programs vary from state to state. The programs may also have different names, and different income and resource requirements. Some states, may require you to have Medicare before you're eligible for Medicaid. You should contact your state medical assistance (Medicaid) office for more information.

About long term care

Long term (or custodial) care includes nonmedical care if you have a chronic illness or disability. This nonmedical care can include nonskilled personal care assistance, such as help with everyday activities like dressing, bathing, and using the bathroom. According to the U.S. Department of Health estimates, at least 70% of people over 65 will need long term care services and support at some point. Long term care can be provided at home, in the community, in an assisted living facility, or in a nursing home.

Medicare and most health insurance plans, including Medicare Supplement Insurance (Medigap) policies, do not pay for this type of care. It's important to start planning for long term care now to maintain your independence and to make sure you get the care you may need, in the setting you want, in the future.

What is the Health Insurance Marketplace?

The Health Insurance Marketplace is a key part of the Affordable Care Act and will take effect in 2014. It's a new way for individuals, families, and employees of small businesses to get health insurance.

Please note that Medicare is not part of the Marketplace and if you already have Medicare, your benefits will not change. No matter how you get Medicare - whether through Original Medicare or a Medicare Advantage Plan - you'll have the same benefits you have now, and you won't have to make any changes.

Ways to pay for long term care

- Long term care insurance: This type of insurance can help pay for many types of long term care, including both skilled and nonskilled (custodial) care. Long term care insurance policies can vary widely. Some policies may cover only nursing home care. Others may include coverage for a range of services, like adult day care, assisted living, medical equipment, and informal home care. Long term care insurance does not replace your Medicare coverage.
- Personal resources. Some insurance companies let you use your life insurance policy to pay for long term care. Ask your insurance agent how this works.
- Other private options. You may choose to pay for long term care through a trust or annuity. The best option for you depends on your age, health status, risk of needing long term care, and your personal financial situation. Talk to a financial professional about your options.
- Medicaid: If you're eligible for Medicaid, you may be able to get Medicaid services that help you stay in your home instead of moving to a nursing home. For more information, contact your state medical assistance (Medicaid) office.
- Veterans' benefits: The Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) may provide long term care for service-related disabilities or for certain eligible veterans. The VA also has a Housebound and Aid and Attendance Allowance Program that provides cash grants to eligible disabled veterans and surviving spouses.
- Programs of All-inclusive Care for the Elderly (PACE): This is a Medicare and Medicaid program offered in many states that allows people who otherwise need a nursing-home level of care to remain in the community.
